

TERMS OF THE DAILY DEMOCRAT TO THE COUNTRY.

ONE MONTH	12 50
THREE MONTHS	3 00
SIX MONTHS	6 00
ONE YEAR	12 00

To our Country Patrons.

Please to register your letter containing results, as we hold out rewards for all that are registered. We are not responsible for losses in the mails, about occur, unless letters are registered.

Agents for the Louisville Democrat.

J. W. Green, Glasgow, Ky.
John H. Glavin, Louisville, Ky.
John W. Kinkead, Lexington, Ky.
John K. Kinney, Frankfort, Ky.
John K. Rankin, Brandenburg, Ky.
John L. Young, Owsley, Ky.
A. J. Odom, Lagrange, Owsley, Ky.
W. B. Gray, New Castle, Ky.

ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS will be unanswered. Whatever is intended for insertion must be communicated by the names and address of the writer, and necessary for publication, as well as a guarantee of good worth.

CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS, containing interesting or important news, briefly stated, are solicited from all parts of the world.

RECORDED COMMUNICATIONS, or manuscripts that have been used, are owned exclusively by the Louisville Daily Democrat.

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC TICKET.

FOR GOVERNOR,
W. B. KINKEAD,
Of Fayette.

FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR,
HARRISON TAYLOR,
Of Mason.

FOR ATTORNEY GENERAL,
JOHN H. MARSHALL,
Of Franklin.

FOR ACTOR,
J. SMITH HURTT,
Of Madison.

FOR TAXEXCRUE,
ALF. ALLEN,
Of Breckinridge.

FOR REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE,
J. J. CRADDOCK,
Of Barren.

FOR SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION,
R. E. HARNEY,
Of Jefferson.

Appointments of Hon. W. B. KID.

Hillside, Hardin county, Thursday, July 18, at 1 o'clock.

Hodenville, Larue county, Friday, July 19th, at 1 o'clock.

Hillside, Madison county, Monday, July 22d, at 1 o'clock.

Irving, Estill county, Tuesday, July 23, at 1 o'clock.

Booneville, Owsley county, Wednesday, July 24, at 1 o'clock.

Mattoxboro, Clay county, Thursday, July 25, at 1 o'clock.

Bardstown, Knox county, Friday, July 26, at 1 o'clock.

London, Laurel county, Saturday, July 27, at 1 o'clock.

Somerset, Pulaski county, Monday, July 29, at 1 o'clock.

Craig Orchard, Lincoln county, Tuesday, July 30, at 1 o'clock.

Grand
NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC

MASS MEETING
AT LEBANON,
WEDNESDAY, JULY 24.

Great Speakers in Attendance.

A Reunion of that Democracy whose Every Bugle Call was a Signal of Victory.

We are very happy to announce to our friends in Knox and vicinity that there will be a regular old-fashioned Democratic mass meeting at Barbourville,

FRIDAY, JULY 20th,

At which the following eloquent and popular speakers will be present:

Hon. W. B. KINKEAD,
Hon. G. H. HUSTON,
Ex-Gov. ROBINSON.

We hope the good people of the country will turn out en masse to hear the principles of Democracy discussed.

JUDGE KINKEAD AT LEXINGTON.

The Ablest Man in Kentucky in the Field.

REVIEW OF THE SITUATION.

Hon. Wm. B. Kinkead, of the National Democratic party, will speak at Lexington.

Saturday, July 20th.

NOTICE.

We are requested by the Central Committee of the Union Democracy to ask that some friends in each county will at once forward to the Central Committee, at Louisville, the names of five efficient, working, reliable Conservatives, who will act as a County Committee during the pending political campaign. All communications should be addressed to John H. HARNEY, Chairman of the State Central Committee, Louisville, Ky. Steps are being taken to effect a thorough organization of the Union Democracy against both the rebels and Radicals. Every friend of the peace of the State should be up and doing.

PUBLIC SPEAKING.

We are happy to announce that able and eloquent champion of National Democratic principles, Hon. JOHN B. HUSTON, will speak at Columbus, in Adair county, on July 20th.

DR. F. B. TRAUTEN is the National Democratic candidate in the Eleventh district, composed of Barren, Metcalfe and Monroe. All true friends of the Union and Kentucky will vote for him.

Committee for Mason County.

George L. Forman, R. A. Cochran, Dr. W. H. Robertson, Walter Small, Lucien S. Loutrel, S. C. Pearce, Dr. John M. Harlan, Colonel B. C. Grider, Hon. George W. Dunlap, Hon. G. S. Franklin.

It will be a glorious day of Democracy, the Union and State rights; for the Constitution, and against its enemies. Turn out, National Democrats.

GRAND MEETING

OF THE

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC

Party,

AT MUNFORDVILLE.

Old Battle Days Remembered.

The Gathering of the Sons of Democracy.

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGES TO NONE.

The Rights of the States to be Free, and the Duty of the Government to Protect them against Usurpation, Tyranny and External and Internal Coercion.

Turn Out, Free People of Old Kentucky.

There will be a grand National Democratic Meeting and Speaking at Muncieville, on Friday, August 20, at which the following and other Speakers will be in attendance:

Hon. W. B. Kinkead, James T. Brant, Ette, J. B. Huston, W. H. Wadsworth, Aaron Hardin, C. S. Hill, G. W. Dunlap, George S. Franklin, Gen. W. H. Hoskins, J. H. Harlan, Col. R. T. Jacob, Col. B. C. Grider.

National Democrats and all friends of peace, order and good government, turn out and hear a discussion of the perils of the hour and the right remedy.

State Central Committee.

John H. HARNEY, Chairman; Z. M. Sherrill, S. S. Bush, J. E. Gallbreath, William A. Ronald, Hamilton Pope and Joseph G. Wilson, with power to appoint sub-committees in every part of the State, and all other powers usual for such com-

LOUISVILLE DAILY DEMOCRAT.

VOLUME XXIV.

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY: THURSDAY MORNING, JULY 18, 1867.

NUMBER 1.

Platform Adopted by Union Democratic Convention, at Louisville, April 11, 1867.

Resolved, That the late attempt at secession or rebellion was a crime and a blunder, and the fruitful source of all the trouble that now afflict the country. That we are a political organization which, through its organs, its speakers, and its nominations, induces the movement of the South in the attempt to divide the union of these States; nor do we believe that any proposal to reduce any State or States to the condition of territories, or compel them to adopt negro suffrage, will be of any service to us.

Resolved, By this convention of the Union Democracy, that in our judgment the following doctrines are wise, just and consonant with our principles:

1. The Union of the States is, in every case, indispensable, and is perpetual; and the Constitution of the United States, and the laws of Congress, are supreme, and must be upheld in every state, and upheld in every territory, including the right of representation in Congress, are solemnly guaranteed by this Constitution, to save which from overthrow must blood and treasure be expended to the last drop, and that the Constitution and laws of the United States be upheld.

2. The right of the dignity and the equality of man, and the protection of his rights, are fundamental principles of our government.

3. The maintenance of the national Government in any other form, than that of a confederacy of states, is a violation of the principles of our government.

4. Each State has the independent right to secede from the Union, and to elect its own members to Congress.

5. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

6. Each House of Congress is made by the Constitution, the sole judge of the election, returns and qualifications of its members, but the Senate is to be the final judge of the election, returns and qualifications of its members.

7. Each House of Congress is made by the Constitution, the sole judge of the election, returns and qualifications of its members, but the Senate is to be the final judge of the election, returns and qualifications of its members.

8. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

9. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

10. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

11. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

12. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

13. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

14. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

15. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

16. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

17. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

18. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

19. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

20. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

21. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

22. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

23. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

24. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

25. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

26. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

27. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

28. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

29. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

30. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

31. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

32. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

33. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

34. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

35. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

36. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

37. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

38. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each State to order and control its internal affairs, according to its own judgment, exclusive of any control by the Constitution of the United States, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our government must rest.

39. The maintenance invariate of the rights of the States, and especially of the right of each

